The Story of the Eilean Bheàrnaraigh ferry

Getting a car onto Berneray used to be no easy matter...

... until in 1982 the council started a vehicle ferry service. The Eilean Bheàrnaraigh operated between Berneray and the Otternish slipway on North Uist.

The ferry was operated by two men who had to stay on Berneray. The crew covered all the sailings, six days a week, but in 1988, when ferry traffic increased considerably with the construction of the harbour, the work pattern changed to two weeks on, one week off. There were up to seven crossings a day. The fare was £2 for a car and 50p for a passenger.

There were personnel changes over the years, D A MacAskill was in the crew from start to finish. Farquhar MacLeod, Roddy MacAskill, Neil

Thanks to all the Cottage volunteers:

Andrew, Cathy, Donald, Ena, Ethne, Gloria, who also managed the volunteer rota, Iris, Janet, Kirsty, Loriana, Lorna, Màiri Bhàn, Stuart and Thelma.

During the summer, the Cottage is open from 11am to 3pm from Monday to Friday and a volunteer covers one session, 11am to 1pm or 1pm to 3pm.

Meeting visitors to the cottage is very interesting and rewarding and new volunteers would be a most welcome addition to the team.

MacAskill, Hugh MacIsaac and Robbie Steadwood were the other Berneray people who were in the crew at some stage.

In 1996 the Eilean Bheàrnaraigh was replaced by the Calmac ferry Loch Bhrusda which also provided a vehicle ferry service from Otternish to Leverburgh. The Eilean Bheàrnaraigh then moved south and operated between Eriskay and South Uist.

Following the opening of the causeway between Eriskay and South Uist in 2001 the council sold the Eilean Bheàrnaraigh.

The Eilean Bheàrnaraigh was bought by the Sons of the Most Holy Redeemer, a small Catholic order, who had a monastery on the tiny island of Papa Stronsay, Orkney. Papa Stronsay is less than one tenth of the size of Berneray and lies a few hundred metres from the larger island of Stronsay.

The Eilean Bheàrnaraigh then moved to the south west of Ireland where she is still in service. Now named Sancta Maria, she runs from Castletown-Bearhaven to Bere Island in County Cork.
